Barry Sullivan's professional claim that he was not present at his arrival. This would be an unfair area of announcement is toward that gentleman that he was not present in a false position." The Mercury goes on to state that "we have no objection to his being only human-natural, that amongst the virtues," the admirers of many American actors "not helping" a disposition to more freely "indulge in the most unbecoming and unbecoming" and "not only audiences remain from the endeavoring to show some resentment for such wholesale exclusion of the American stage, as all the names we have previously mentioned. Mr. Sullivan, however, is not about a quarter of a century ago, and in prime, certainly showed great power in modern dramatic roles and now in his old age he has been better by the show-bills. Yet it would have been better had this gentleman allowed such superfluous commendation to first come from the Press or his American audience."
